Spain nor China is in a position to fight just now, the former having not yet recovered from the effects of a long and disastrous civil war and with the Cuban affair still on hand, and the latter suffering from a failure of the crop in the north, and the strain upon its resources caused by the conflict with Russia. The intervention of the German Representatives also points to the rise of German influence in China. A few years back Prussia was held in comparatively little esteem in the Far East, but the vigorous action taken by the German Government in the Anna affair has served to impress the rulers of Peking with a salutary sense of the determination of Germany not to brook slight or to remain passive under injury. The rapid rise of the new Empire to the front rank in Europe has also, doubtless, been carefully noted by Chinese statesmen, and made them well disposed to listen to its Representatives. It is to be hoped they will now succeed in arranging the dispute between them and his Spanish colleague.

The rulers of Turkey are evidently bent on hastening her downfall. They have rejected the proposals of the Powers, without, it would seem, even presenting counter proposals. As far as can be gleaned from the telegram in which this announcement is made, the German suggestions of Lord Salisbury are likewise declined. The not appears simply suicidal. By it the Porte has isolated itself from all Europe, and now the eagle may be expected to gather together to divide the spoil. It is difficult to see how war can be avoided. Probably it was with the knowledge of the perpetuity into which this knotty question has thrown the leading Powers that the Turks have thus dared to defy Europe. If the latter wish to avoid the fatal error set them by this action of the Porte, they will proceed to united and forcible occupation of the undivided provinces, and compel Turkey to grant such guarantees for the future as will ensure the proper government of the Christian population. But further argument from the great Powers is, to say the least of it, rather doubtful, and it is to be feared that Europe is on the eve of one of the most tremendous struggles with which it has been shaken during the reign of Her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria.

THE JIN-CHANG, the Futai of Fokien, has, it would appear, arrived at a determination to bring the Formosan aborigines into subjection, and, with his accustomed energy, has commenced preparations for the work. A considerable Chinese force has been collected at Taiwan, whether the Futai himself has proceeded, and will, of course, give directions as to the plan of operations to be carried out. But how far he will prove successful in his difficult undertaking is questionable. So far the Chinese troops have never been able to cope with the savages, and the latter hold them in scornful contempt. In fact, it is almost impossible to get Chinese "braves" to fight the aborigines. They do not relish the service, for it is one of great danger, and they are in constant fear of the ambushes laid for them by their wild and desperate enemies. They see in every bush a lurking foe, and this interferes very seriously with their easy enjoyment, to say nothing of the discipline they entertain to an antagonist who is not to be frightened away with noise or a display of force. Actual fighting is, indeed, the last thing desired by the ill-disciplined Chinese soldiers—they have been accustomed to loaf about and prey on the peaceful inhabitants among whom they are quartered, and this they can do to perfection. It is possible, however, that by the exercise of severity, the Futai may contrive to do something even with such poor material, and read the aborigines a lesson that will serve to put a check upon the predatory raids on the Chinese settled portion of the island. But with regard to bringing them into subjection, that is quite another matter. The undertaking is one that would surely tax the patience and energy of a great military power, on account of the mountains and inaccessible nature of the country, the ferocity of the aborigines, and the courage and ferocity of the aborigines. Still, the task is one that ought not to be shirked. The English have successfully accomplished similar ones both in America, New Zealand, and South Africa; the Dutch are carrying on a more arduous one in Sumatra; and the Spaniards have subjugated Sulu. The Chinese will, however, in all probability, fail to crush the aborigines by these means. The surest way they could adopt to conquer the savages would be to push settlements into the territory hitherto surrendered to the aborigines, and by thus colonizing it, gradually elbow the latter into a corner or divide them into small communities powerless for mischief. China can well spare colonists for the work, and they would also be the means of opening up the island to civilization.

When many districts of the Empire are so over-populated, and distress and famine is so prevalent, it is strange that the Chinese do not emigrate to this fertile island. But the reason is possibly to be found in the insecurity to life and property existing there, the corruption of the administration, and the unenviable reputation the climate enjoys among the Chinese. All these drawbacks are, however, more or less susceptible of amendment, and it is to be hoped that the Futai of Fokien will succeed in some of the objects he has in view. A measure of reform in the administration will, at least, be accomplished, though it may not prove so lasting as Taro would desire.

The report of the meeting of the Fokien Race Club which appeared in Saturday's issue was taken from the Fokien Herald, but, through an inadvertence, not acknowledged.

A public examination of the scholars at the Government Central School will be held on Friday next at two o'clock p.m. Mr. E. B. Fokien, the Governor will distribute the prizes.

At the Peak the maximum temperature during the past week, as recorded in Saturday's Gazette, was 83.0; the minimum 47.5; at the Harbour, the maximum 80.0, and the minimum 35.0. No rain fell during the week.
